"Dùthchas" is a Gaelic word that means a great many things, a connection to land and people, the affinity to a place. We believe that Gaelic is an important part of our island heritage, and that the word Dùthchas encompasses our connection to our island home.

You can read more about dùthchas in the article by Col Gordon: Dùthchas - What are we actually talking about?

A scenic landscape view from a mountain peak looking down a valley towards a coastal town and the sea. The foreground shows rocky terrain and sparse vegetation. The middle ground features a valley with fields, a road, and a forested area. In the background, a coastal town is nestled at the base of hills, with the ocean visible to the right.

Dr Horace Fairhurst
Hopefield
LAMLASH
Isle of Arran

Dear Horace

I have recently managed to recruit two more Investigators to the archaeological staff of the Commission, and we shall now be able to undertake a certain amount of Emergency Survey work to meet the impact of the many destructive agencies threatening field monuments.

It is pretty clear that in this respect our greatest enemy in Scotland is afforestation, and we are making arrangements with the Forestry Commission and other private concerns whereby we hope that they will provide us with advance notice of their annual ploughing and planting programmes. So far, the Stirling District Office of the West Conservancy of the Forestry Commission have provided us with a map showing their schemes for the next few years; and you will see from the enclosed extract that their plans for Arran between now and 1979 are going to engulf several known monuments in the following areas:

1. south of Tormore
2. between Glenashdale and Kildonan
3. on Cnoc Dubh, inland from Lamlash, including parts of Glen Rickard and Glen ant-Suidhe, east of Glenloig.

We hope to incorporate in this year's field programme a short spell on Arran, and it is for this reason that I am writing to let you know of our intentions. I am sure that, with your wide experience in fieldwork and your local knowledge, you will have valuable advice which you might be prepared to give us to help us on our way; and, of course, if you had the time or inclination to take part in any of the actual fieldwork, this would be of very great assistance.

However, the main thing is to assure you that we would never contemplate coming to Arran without letting you know, and this is to give you advance notice.

With all good wishes to you both for 1975.

As ever
