Discussion: Woodland Crofting and Land Management

Extensive discussion took place regarding woodland crofting definitions, models, and viability:

Crofting Models and Economics

- Different types of grazing models discussed
- Crofting as a tool for rainforest regeneration
- Land management generally, with crofting as a tool for managing woodland
- Question raised about financial viability of crofts vs smallholdings and legal requirements of crofters to have certain income
- Discussion of crofting as a bartering/cashless community system where crofters save on living costs
- Basic income needs: rent, council tax, and other essential costs are covered by crofting community
- There will be a thorough assessment of economic viability during the feasibility study

Income Generation Opportunities

- Hydro-electric schemes mentioned as potential income stream
- Would be assessed during feasibility study
- Possibility of future share release for infrastructure like hydro
- Crofting allows for diverse income streams in woodland management, timber sales, food production, craft and artesanship, cottage industry, agroforestry, alongside myriad opportunities for digital remote working.

Croft Allocation Process

- Question raised: How will crofts be allocated?
- Discussion of balance between:
 - Prioritising local Arran people
 - Identifying people with appropriate skills
 - Recognition that people "from Arran" might not currently live here
- Agreed: Allocation criteria will be identified and decided through membership consultation, though it is highly likely that people from Arran with the right skill set will be prioritised.

Nucleated Settlements

- Discussion of settlement design around generations
- Model: younger peoplecroft in the landscape, older people move to centre of crofting community
- Not a village, but a nucleated center within the crofting area

Hutting Integration

- Hutting discussed as an enterprise within a croft
 - Hutting families could build relationships with crofting families over time
 - Hutting as potential revenue generation for crofts
